

Why do Bubbles Pop?

Bubbles are made out of two types of matter. One is liquid That is the skin of the bubble. Another is gas. That is the air we breath out.

When you blow a bubble into the air, it will pop because it evaporates. All of the liquid evaporates and the bubble will pop. If the wind blows really hard, the bubble will pop and turn into a kind of gas.

If a bubble touches a dry, solid surface, it will pop because bubbles do not like dry surfaces. Bubbles do not pop on wet surfaces because they like moist surfaces. The wetter the surface, the bigger the bubble will inflate.

In conclusion, there are two reasons a bubble will pop. Firstly a bubble will pop because it evaporates by the sun. Secondly, if a bubble touches a dry surface it will pop because it hates dry surfaces.

By Remy

WHY DO BUBBLES POP?

Bubbles are made of liquids and the gas is called Carbon Dioxide. The liquids are called dishwashing liquid and water.

The bubble mixture evaporates when a bubble pops. It has dried out because it has touched a dry surface.

When a bubble touches a dry surface, the bubble pops because it is evaporating. Carbon Dioxide comes from your lungs and if you blow too hard the bubble will pop but if you blow soft it will come out. Carbon Dioxide fills the bubble up.

First when the bubble touches a dry surface it pops. Second, bubbles pop when they are dry.

This is evaporation.

-By Max

Room 3 Fishing

The eel was as slimy as a slug. It was attracted to the pink bow. It was as black as a bat. The slimy

By Hamish

At the fishing trip somebody caught a eel. Splish, splash went the tail of the eel. I was scared of it. Out of the water the eel comes. The eel looked like it was slimy and slippery, but smooth.

By Hannah

I knew it was coming, waiting patiently, looking for so long at the shimmering water. Then pulling it up I said to myself "I have caught something, I have caught ....seaweed. I have caught seaweed!!!!" Looking over at Ben, he had caught a tiny fish. Looking at the eel in the bucket that Sasha caught I said to myself. "Well this is getting tiring. I need a break." I kept carrying on until we had to go then I said "Well I did good but I think I'm getting a feeling that my tummy is getting hungry now."

By Joshua

The eel was a black velvet colour. I have never seen an eel as small as this one. The rather small eel escaped from the bucket.

By Miki